They Serve as a Text for a Good Sermon on Temperance. Victor Smith, in New York Press. We must not confound Percy Chubb with the Percival Chubb who asserts that children of the rich have a terrible time and deserve the pity of mankind because they cannot go out into the streets and make mud pies. Percy Chubb has two sons in the insurance business with him, Sidney and Hendon, who do not look as if they had suffered from being children of the rich, uneducated in the mud-pie art. I have a leaning toward mud pies myself, but "give me my ruthers," as Tolly would say, and let me be born again, I'd choose to be a pampered son of fortune. He who goes about pitying children of the rich is wasting his time and encouraging silly sentimentality. Take any family. Take George Gould's. Who on earth ever had happier children? Nothing that money can buy is denied them-and money buys a whole lot of things these days. Do they need a mud pie bakery? Look over the list of millionaire families in New York and compare their children with the children of the poor; who have the best of it? Who are making the superior men and women? Honestly our young boys and girls of the Croesuses and Midases deserve a great deal of credit. They are making fine men and women, useful as well as ornamental, in spite of great wealth and without baking mud pies. The young men growing up as drunkards do not as a rule come from the families of the rich. We seldom find sons of our moneyed aristocracy loafing in barrooms. Their tippling is done in a gentleman-like way in clubs, or at home, where they are educated to a degree of moderation entirely unknown in the less fortunate classes. Leisure leads them into many temptations which never appeal to a working man, therefore they deserve the more credit. Morality is the scarecrow in the field of human progress. The failure of sumptuary one drink. There is no compromise with laws is the landmark of human hind- rum. Either it is yours, or you are its, if thought.
